Lyman Predicts Bright Financial Future Here

A glittering financial future was envisioned for Torrance today by Councilman David K. Lyman, who said City Council cooperation with business and industry over the past four years has paved the way for a prosperous tomorrow.

"The three most significant events in Torrance's financial makeup have been the advent of Del Amo Shopping Center, relocation of Garrett Corp.'s entire operation here; and, most recently, construction of Del Amo Financial Center," Lyman said.

These three facilities are providing a sound tax base for Torrance — one that already has created a revenue almost equal to that of the property tax, Lyman said.

"HOWEVER," he added, "none of these things has happened by accident. The City Council in the past four years has worked long and hard to resolve the multitude of special problems that could have delayed construction for years."

Lyman cited such problems as providing services and access road for the 7,000 employees of Garrett Corp., whose move was of urgent necessity, and in deciding how to handle expeditiously the difficult legal entanglements of oil wells on the Del Amo property.

"In each of these cases, the City Council went out and trampled through the weeds with company executives to see the problems first hand, and then to resolve them with difficulty and speed," Lyman said.

"THE RESULT of this cooperation between government and business has been rewarding: we not only have earned a reputation among California cities for spiraling progress, but have received the envied Triple A financial rating on loans for capital improvements."

"Additionally," Lyman said, "statistics indicate that for every manufacturing job made available in a community, the resultant business generated provides a city with the monetary ability to support seven residents."
